Using Film to Teach Cultural Analysis Skills in L2: A Pragmatic Guide

Juan Caballero, Fall 2012 BLC Fellow

I am here presenting individually the products of almost entirely collaborative efforts. I would like to here acknowledge my generous contributors:

• Katherine Lambe (Spanish & Portuguese)
  Piloted 5-lesson program in Spanish 4, co-wrote materials

• Anna-Maria Belleza (BLC, Italian)
  Piloted a 2-day lesson in Italian 4, co-wrote and translated materials

• Rick Kern (BLC, French)
• Mark Kaiser (BLC, LFLFC, Slavic)
• Marco Purpura (BLC, Italian)
• Ellen Langer (BLC, Slavic)
Presentation Overview

• Introduction:
  – Theoretical Framework and Scope
  – Curricular Context and Learning Goals
  – Utilizing Film Form and Basic Formal Analysis

• Sample Lesson: Interiority and Melodrama (1/5)

• Semester-scale Planning
  – Self-Training
  – Mapping out a Program (a 5-lesson sample sequence from Spanish 5)

• [Sample Lesson: Prejudice and Documentary (4/5)]

• Implications and Adaptability to Other Contexts
Introduction:
Theoretical Framework and Scope

• Literacy-oriented language teaching makes knowledge of discourse genres and their codes a central goal of SLA

  - "Literacy is the use of socially-, historically-, and culturally-situated practices of creating and interpreting meaning through texts. It entails at least a tacit awareness of the relationships between textual conventions and their contexts of use...It draws on a wide range of cognitive abilities...on knowledge of genres, and on cultural knowledge." (Kern 2000: 16-17)

  - “Media-literacy” and “film literacy” versus literacy proper: the “reading” of audio-visual texts (according to the codes and conventions of film form) that supplements the spoken and written texts

  - For a recent theoretical and cognitive framework for film literacy and media literacy, see the work of the University of Western Australia's Mark Pegrum, in particular his 2008 article on film literacy

• This presentation will show how advanced language students can be taught to read those “codes and conventions” critically in tandem with linguistic and literary ones, and how reflexivity in any one of the three modes supplements and reinforces reflexivity in the other two
Introduction: Defamiliarizing Film

- Film’s utility lies primarily in its familiarity—unlike literature, its codes and formal conventions are almost universally known by both instructors and students.
  - Many students come from high schools where literature and film were already taught in tandem in L1
- The downside to familiarity: habits of uncritical reading ("transparency" and entertainment value)
  - Affective filter ← difficulty of parsing every word spoken
- The “A-ha moment” of seeing the familiar through more critical eyes
Introduction:
Curricular Context and Learning Goals

• Advanced language-courses are a pedagogical bridge between introductory language classes and “content” classes
Introduction:
Curricular Context and Learning Goals

• Advanced language-courses are a pedagogical bridge between introductory language classes and “content” classes
  – Rudimentary literary analysis is usually the central (but rarely the exclusive) occasion for building “tacit awareness” of conventions and discourse genres at the advanced language level
  – Overlap in learning goals with critical-thinking and freshman-rhetoric courses
  – Most instructors and curriculum writers cite timidity and unfamiliarity with film pedagogy as the main reason for not exploiting film in this context

• Students’ sophistication and reflexivity in “reading” films could (and should) develop in tandem with their reading of literature across this bridge, but rarely do
Introduction: Teaching Literature and Film by Analogy

The goal at this advanced level, as much for literature as for film or visual arts, should be working knowledge of basic critical concepts and passive fluency with critical modes of “reading”.

Which begs the (potentially derailling) question: which are the “basic” concepts? What are the core questions and habits of thoughts that are appropriate to introduce at this level?
Introduction: Teaching Analytic Habits of Thought

• Emphasize depth over breadth
  – Depth: connecting formal to rhetorical and cultural analysis
  – Breadth: exhaustive formal analysis
• Emphasize argumentation as goal of analysis
  – Tie discussion to writing or other argumentative exercises
• Be reflexive and responsive about emphasis and focus
  – Always fine-tune exercises along the way

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Levels of interpretation of a film</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Diegetic</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Extradiegetic</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rhetorical</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cultural &amp; Transcultural</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Introduction: Contextualizing Goals

Figure 2: Advanced Languages Courses as a curricular context with unique priorities

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Level of interpretation (Spectrum from &quot;internal&quot; to &quot;external&quot;)</th>
<th>Approaches &amp; Topics</th>
<th>Relative curricular priorities for a given department’s deployment of film at the level of... (A = highest)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Diegetic (within fictional universe of the film)</td>
<td>Language used by characters*</td>
<td>A</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Psychology of characters, realism of events</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Extradiagetic (style, production)</td>
<td>Film form, stylistic analysis</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Rhetorical (intended interpretation)</td>
<td>Intended message, impact, or influence on viewer</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Cultural &amp; Transcultural (original audience's cultural context vs. L2 class context)</td>
<td>Unintended/accidental cultural content; subtexts in contemporary history and culture</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

>`*Language used by characters includes Diegetic, Extradiagetic, and Rhetorical perspectives.`

Comparing C1 context to C2 context
Example Lesson 1: Interiority and Melodramatic Form

Link to LFLFC
• Pre-viewing handout (taken home the day before)
• Contextualizes clip as independent
• Presents context and vocabulary for diagetic parsing, but also for exegetic and cultural level as well in the last box
• Sketches out structure of discussion next day as an active, not passive, exercise with film

Identity and Film: Introduction and Clips
How do the past, identity, and their mental processes get represented in a melodrama?

We're going to watch together a climactic scene from the Spanish film, The Law of Desire (1987), by director Pedro Almodóvar. Forget the rest of the film, which is about a murder: we're going to study just this isolated scene. In it, we're going to see how various processes of identity and personal communication are represented. For us, the key question is the one that the protagonist puts to his doctor at the beginning of the scene: who am I? We should focus on how the other characters answer this questions, and how they build for the amnesiac patient a past, a family plot, and an identity based on those stories from the life of his sister.

We're going to watch the film together twice: once, with subtitles, to focus on the way characters communicate both verbally and non-verbally. Then, we're going to watch it again without subtitles to study how the style and film form influence our experience of the clip. After our discussion, you'll have a short list of questions to answer at home in complete sentences and to discuss tomorrow. You'll find these on the other side of this sheet.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Characters, in order of appearance:</th>
<th>Escenas:</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>- Pablo Quintero, film director and amnesiac (realizado por Eusebio Poncela)</td>
<td>- 1: The amnesiac patient wakes up and is defended from the police who want to interrogate him by his doctor.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- Doctor Martin, his benevolent doctor (realizado por Nacho Martínez)</td>
<td>- 2: The doctor and the lawyer discuss this defense strategy until they are interrupted by the patient's sister (note how the lawyer looks at the sister)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- Unnamed lawyer, hired by Dr. Martin (realizado por Agustín Almodóvar)</td>
<td>- 3: The sister tries to &quot;recuperate&quot; her brother's memory and &quot;bring him up to date&quot; with an emotional, confessional monologue about family and identity</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- Tina Quintero, estranged sister of the amnesiac (realizada por estrella Márqués, Carmen Maura)</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Vocabulary used in the scene:</th>
<th>Useful Critical concepts for discussing film and sexual identity</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>- Estar liado = have amorous relations, usually secretly or illegitimately. It's a very &quot;adult&quot; term, which sounds out of place applied to an incestuous relationship at a young age.</td>
<td>- melodrama: a way of telling stories in which the sentimental manipulation of the reader/viewer matters more than realism.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>- &quot;supongo&quot; (al final de una frase y enfáticamente) = &quot;o, no?&quot; or &quot;, would you deny it?&quot;</td>
<td>- vidente: film viewer (irregular/false cognate)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

- transgendered: a person who identifies with a gender they weren't born to (social concept).
- transsexual: a person whose sex has been changed surgically and/or hormonally (biological concept).
- transvestite: a person persona who dresses in a way inconsistent with their assigned gender (fashion concept)
Lesson-Plan and Discussion Guide

- Optional Discussion Topics: front-load cultural and generic context
  - How do we discuss a film? How does one discuss filmic style? In this series of lessons, we'll discuss and analyze film with incrementally more sophistication, but for now, let's stay somewhat on the surface and discuss identity
  - Are there criteria specific to melodrama? Are the ways we watch, enjoy, and judge a melodrama different from the way we watch, enjoy, and judge a serious drama or an important novel? How are melodramatic characters, and our sympathy for them, different?
    - Has everyone here seen a telenovela? This isn't exactly a telenovela, but it's a parody of how they work.
- [show clip#1 – with English subtitles]
- While the clip runs or before starting it, write on the board the four topics you want to discuss separately, plus where they fall in the timeline:
  1. clip without subtitles,
  2. the characters (attitude, body language),
  3. sentiments (sympathy, aggression),
  4. clip with subtitles,
  5. The dialogue (what they say, exactly),
  6. The form (melodrama & manipulation)
- Take-home assignment
- After the clip starts and before discussing, announce that you'd like to discuss these topics separately!
  - Announce it each time you go from one topic to another, and politely defer questions or answers that are more appropriate to a future topic as they come up!
- 2.) the characters (attitude, body language) ~10min
  - Describe Tina. How does she speak, walk, treat men?
  - How does Pablo act? Is he suspicious? Expressive?
- 3.) sentiments (sympathy, aggression) ~5min
  - Does Pablo seem to understand what the other characters say to him?
  - Do Pablo's reactions make sense to you? Are there times you don't understand them?
  - Do you feel sympathy for Pablo? Does Tina's monologue affect you, or is it simply a character speaking? Is the actress, Carmen Maura, effective in her delivery of the monologue?
- 4.) <show clip#2 – no subtitles> ~15min
  - [Mention transcript function on LFLC—they can refer to exact wording in their answers.]
  - Let's discuss the actual facts to be clear. What happened in Morocco?
  - How does Tina speak? Is it consistent, or does her tone and attitude change within the monologue?
    - Are there lines that seem addressed to herself and not Pablo? Which ones?
  - There are points where Tina commits grammatical mistakes, for instance, changing the subject of a verb and messing up the noun-verb agreement of a sentence. What sense would it make to include those errors in the film? What effect do those errors have?
- 5.) The form (melodrama & manipulation) ~5min
  - How do the movements of the camera and the frame affect your sympathy with the passive position of Pablo, and his reactions to what the other characters tell him?
  - Was it confusing to you? What was confusing, specifically? Is Tina's monologue hard to understand at the speed she delivers it? What effect does that difficulty have on the viewer?
- 6.) Take-home assignment: Send them home with Discussion questions and tell them to bring written answers in complete sentences!

- Rough time breakdown and blackboard timetable: discussion should feel pre-structured yet open
- Watch clip twice—distinguish diegetic from exegetic viewing
- Numbered topics progress up the analytical spectrum (and imply directionality to students)
- Terminology is never asked for explicitly in the questions, but instructor should reuse anything students volunteer and encourage dialogue between interpretations
- Topics and questions heirarchized by importance/necessity
  - Includes multi-part questions, optional questions, etc
This first film assignment in the program establishes the expectation that film discussions will lead directly to thematic discussions and active, argumentative exercises.

- Puts rhetorical and transcultural questions on same level
- Very open-ended interpretive questions

Identity and Film: Writing Exercise

How do the past, identity, and their mental processes get represented in a melodrama?

Family and Identity

1. In your individual presentations, many people spoke about the importance of family in the formation of identities. Thinking about the film clips specifically, what role does family play in these scenes?
   - How are the identities of Tina and Pablo determined by their family circumstances?
   - Is it possible to overcome circumstances and create an identity independent of your family?

2. What other texts or images have we seen together that show the impact of family on individual identity?

3. Can a family also influence someone’s regional or national identity? Why or why not?

Memory, the past, and identity

4. Another central theme in the scenes is memory. What role does memory play in the formation of identity?
   - How do individual memories of the past influence one’s identity in the present?
   - How do images of one’s family or parents influence it?

5. Why is it so important for Tina that Pablo remember their shared past?
   - Is it possible to have a clear idea of one’s identity without remembering the past?

6. The scene shows the importance of the past in the identity of an individual and of a family. Is the past as important to a collective identity (national, regional, cultural, religious, political)?
   - Give concrete examples.

7. Where do we see the influence of memories in other texts (or images) that we’ve studied?
Semester-Level Planning: Self-Training

• Many instructors report feeling underprepared to “teach film” without a sound methodological and terminological background— but it can be quite easy to acquire such a background well beyond what this context requires – Leaving behind a monolithic idea of “teaching film”
  – There are no shortage of materials for giving yourself that background

• Recommended reading for a quick inter-session crash-course:
  – Jessica Sturm, "Using Film in the L2 Classroom" (Foreign Language Annals, 2012)
  – The Signs and Syntax unit from James Monaco's The Language of Film (most recent edition, 2012)
• Use this as a reference to structure your self-training, but also your writing of lesson-plans
• You can even translate this into L2 and offer it as an optional reading for more motivated students
• Teach the tip of the iceberg and gesture to the rest, just as when you teach literature
Planning at the semester scale: Mapping out a Program

• Resist the temptation to teach formal analysis as an end unto itself (Pandora’s box!); always direct form to intention, subtext, and/or interpretation
  – Structure exercises around a small set of stylistic choices that reinforce one another and can readily be connected to relevant rhetorical and cultural meanings
  – “Formal analysis with the training wheels on” – suggest relevance

• Terminology: best to give students a little more than they need upfront and let them choose (individually and collectively) how much of it to use
  – Collaborative analysis can be more natural with film, which is habitually viewed collectively
  – Italian 4 example: “rubric and ye shall receive!”
Planning at the semester scale: Scope and range of a Sample Program

Figure 4: A sample lesson-sequence
Piloted in UC Berkeley’s Spanish Department, Fall 2012 (fill out yours from LEFT to RIGHT!)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Thematic Unit</th>
<th>Cultural Analysis Goal (cultural topics supplemental to thematic unit)</th>
<th>Logic of the Exercise (relevant formal analysis à thematic synthesis)</th>
<th>Key Formal Aspects</th>
<th>Supplemental Formal Aspects</th>
<th>Film Genre</th>
<th>Title and Director</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Identity</td>
<td>Recognize alternative/queer families; relativize gender norms</td>
<td>Show melodrama's clear-cut, exaggerated conventions of sympathy, interiority, and identity; manipulation</td>
<td>Acting, Score Composition</td>
<td>Lighting, acting,</td>
<td>Sentimental Melodrama</td>
<td>The Law of Desire (Pedro Almodóvar, 1987)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Heritage</td>
<td>Read cultural myths and conjectures ideologically</td>
<td>Reading mise-en-scene as ideological/polemic; reading origin myths as same</td>
<td>Montage, Voice-over, composition</td>
<td>Sound design, lighting, body language</td>
<td>Historical fiction</td>
<td>The Southern Cross (Patricio Guzmán, 1992)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Historical Memory</td>
<td>Think about narrative sympathy vis-à-vis political sympathy/identity</td>
<td>Show the deliberate and formally highlighted non-narrative details and their utility for sympathy and historical interpretation</td>
<td>Significant non-narrative and background details</td>
<td>Soundtrack, pacing, chapter</td>
<td>Historical drama, coming-of-age</td>
<td>Machuca (Andrés Wood, 2004)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Judgment &amp; Prejudice</td>
<td>Treat documentary and nonfiction as rhetorical/constructed</td>
<td>De-naturalize the connotative and persuasive aspects of documentary interviews</td>
<td>Perspectival Camerawork, Connotative camerawork &amp; set design</td>
<td>Handheld camerawork, intertitles</td>
<td>Political documentary</td>
<td>Cocalero (Alej. Landes, 2007)</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Humor &amp; Imagination</td>
<td>Problematize standards of &quot;realism&quot; and access to techn. &amp; economic opportunity</td>
<td>Discuss science fiction's conjecture mode in terms of realist codes of verisimilitude</td>
<td>&quot;Realism&quot; and verisimilitude; historical/political conjecture</td>
<td>Representation of labor, crowds, and urban spaces</td>
<td>Science Fiction</td>
<td>Sleep Dealer (Alex Rivera, 2008)</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Example Lesson 2:
Prejudice and Documentary Form

Link to LFLFC
Prejudice and the documentary form:

How documentaries make people into representatives of ways of life

Nowadays, the war on drugs has become, for many Latin Americans, a war of ideas: Who holds the blame for the existence of an industry that supplies the global market with such sophistication and impunity? How can we defeat this industry if it’s so interwoven with governments and police forces, without punishing entire populations of innocent people? What rights do the U.S. government and military have when they battle this industry beyond their borders? No one has easy answers to these questions, whatever their politics or beliefs, because their entire interpretation is based on presumptions and prejudices about what drugs are and what responsibility a government has for its own economy. Many recent documentaries, which strive to achieve an international viewing public, foreground these questions with the testimonies of people who have experienced these issues in a way very different from how they are experienced in the US or in Europe.

For example, Cocoloro, a 2005 documentary, tries to explain to the world the presidential campaign of Evo Morales, and how the candidate relates to the coca industry where his political career began. In the two clips, an anonymous old farmer and a representative of a "chaona" or farming cooperative speak about their experiences with coca, which is for them simply a plant that one grows, harvests, and sells like any other. For them, the political questions around coca and cocaine depend on certain concepts of coca that are prejudicial. Watch the two clips and answer these questions in complete sentences, on another sheet of paper to examine the anti-prejudicial rhetoric of the documentary and its characters. Bring that sheet of paper to class tomorrow and take notes on the answers of your classmates. This would make a great topic for a future composition...<wink, wink>.

http://bSpace.berkeley.edu/...

Clip #1: Anonymous old man in the outskirts of La Paz, Bolivia
(isolated scene with no context provided by intertitles or subtitles)

1.) How should we understand the old man’s words “ours” and “theirs”? What is the phrases "turn into drug" and “sacred leaf” imply about the Bolivian use of coca before the industrialization of cocaine? Describe not only his words but also his physical attitude and verbal tone.

2.) What should we assume about his relationship to the local community, which administers the "communitarian justice" he mentions? What do we know (or not know) about the indigenous, rural communities of Bolivia?

3.) How is our interpretation influenced by using as backdrop the cliffs and hills of the outskirts of La Paz? What does it imply about the speaker and his relationship to the earth and to the issue?

4.) While the farmer speaks, images of other farmers engaged in some kind of agricultural labor pass by on the screen. What do they appear to be doing, and what is the director implying by showing them while the old man speaks? What can we know, or not know, without further information?

*Coca" refers to the coca-leaf industry. Coca leaves are the raw material for cocaine, but they are also used in other ways locally. Used as a noun, it refers to a farmer of coca, whether a farmhand or owner of a farm.

• Explicitly asks students to connect style with persuasion and bias
• Asks students to plan ahead to argumentative assignments
  – Formal “evidence” of bias and intention
• Asks students to analyze metaphorical language as persuasive
• Asks students to parse perspective and feeling as stylistic effects
• Foregrounds cultural subtexts
Homework after the preceding discussion is to synthesize notes and prepare for a debate.

- Asks high-level interpretive questions without explicitly prompting for low-level evidence.
Implications and Applicability

- Departmental and curricular specificity: always start at the beginning (& fill out Fig. 2!)
- Possible permutations as “loose” curriculum: Bridge course, “elective units”, intersession mini-courses, “film clubs”
- Self-training and teacher-training: pedagogy courses and curriculum
Micro-Bibliography

Culture and Literacy in SLA

Film theory and writing

Film in SLA and Applied Linguistics Research